Designed Thin Films from Core/Shell Microgels
L. Andrew Lyon, School of Chemistry and Biochemistry, Georgia Institute of Technology

- A collection of analytical tools have been used to study the fundamental properties of thin films assembled from pH/thermoreponsive microgels.

- AFM, SPR, QCM, and Ellipsometry studies suggest that film pH responsivity can result in a bimodal swelling response for certain film architectures.

- More advanced architectures should yield more complex responses.